Depending on the event, the planning, the prizes, it could be 2 days a week.
If there is little to be offered, I don't think the greatest graphics in the world will bring them in at .08 a minute.

Once a week - Depending on how long each lasts and how long it takes to be solved. If the rally takes longer than 2 weeks, more clues should be given in order to keep the avatars interested in it.

depends on How much there is to do and at what speed you learn Habitat.
If it continues to grow I doubt it will get old. Although it is a game for those who have patience };>

Twice a week or more often. People like it when there are planned things to do.
That way, they have a choice to participate or to do something else.

once a week, probably. there should be something going on every night... if nothing more than an entertainer on stage, down at the Good Times Theater. creating a strong police force would motivate a lot of games.

in general, there should be more things that require personal involvement... like a shop keeper actually tending shop, or a politician making campaign speeches. real time and personal is the ticket - that's Habitat's strongest feature. exploit it.

That really varies with the nature of the event... Some are short term by nature, and would fall into the Twice a week or more category.
Others are really quests, and once a month would really be the limit for a paying member.

Once a week...In fact, I think it would be a great idea to host structured activities in Habitat. The great thing about Habitat is that it allows for freedom and creativity. However, I think that people would also enjoy having that freedom balanced by some structure (planned activities) every now and then.
